

Policy

Office of s

including art, music, written distribution of any material created by anyone other than yourself may constitute copyright infringement which is a violation of federal law and University policy. These prohibited activities, inc holder permission, whether through peer-to-peer programs (uploading or downloading) or other

Boston College's Technology Policy with copyright laws and the provisions of licensing agreements that apply to software. In addition, all systems users agree in the Boston College Technical and Information Resources Use Agreement to comply with copyright law.

and loss of network access. In addition, under the Copyright Act, anyone infringing a copyrighted work is liable for damages and, if willful, injunctive relief. infringer may also be subject to criminal penalties, including fines and imprisonment. For significant offenses, these penalties include up to a five-year federal prison term and a fine of $250,000. Prohibited activities include using the Boston College network or software without copyright holder permission.

In recent years, associations to peer file-sharing in Boston College.